

‘Students’

with Ante-Bābhel Daii, written in T_EX

Students

by

Kit Johnstone, Ph.D.

As a teacher I pray for my students. These śiṣyas by my Sword Samnak of Siām’s upbringing you treat like your sons and daughters. I consider it God’s blessing when I see my children honest and doing well. I gave them everything of worth I know.

But things you know are no gods, and swords have sharp edges. You may honestly teach your students but not you but God is their teacher, they may choose to be students of God or of Satan, which they sometimes did. Some of those whom I have taught are my students, some not. You wanted them to find God but you may at times have to accept the fact that they are no students of yours but Satan’s. You may have been incompetent, you may even feel guilty about it, but God’s answer to Moses’s concern of the possibility of misleading some by the use of the word ’Ēlōhīm may be true, ‘say to them what I tell you, and if they err, they err.’

Having had said some are not or no longer your students, be not a hypocrite. Remember how God love all his children equally, even those currently misled and follow the path of Satan. Revenge is never for man but for God alone, we have created nothing and we may destroy nothing. If we were not held in debt of having however inadvertently led men down those paths it was through God’s grace alone and through no justification of ours.

Kit Tyabandha, Ph.D.
Wilderness, 2010